AMF ROADMASTER sets a hot pace in the "Little 500" Bike Race!

The annual "Little 500" Bicycle Race gets under way at Indiana University Memorial Stadium. Wilbur Shaw, racing car immortal, leads 33 AMF Roadmasters around the Stadium track and across the race starting line in official Ford pace car.

Off to a fast start, University of Indiana bike racers round a turn in the gruelling 50-mile race—which adds up to 200-laps. Thirty-three 4-man teams are riding special balloon-tire AMF Roadmasters with racing handle bars and saddles, and no fenders.

Changing riders provides action-packed seconds of acrobatics! The incoming rider drops off saddle—keeping a grip on it—then pushes bike ahead to his relief rider, who grasps handle bar and makes a flying leap onto the saddle!

The winner!—flagged by Indianapolis Motor Speedway Starter, Seth Klein. Each member of the winning team averaged better than 20 miles per hour! Over 12,000 spectators cheered the "Greatest Collegiate Bicycle Race In The World"!

You can set your own hot pace on AMF Roadmaster's new "souped-up" 1954 Luxury Liner! It's got longer, lower lines... special speed features... just like today's new sports cars! See it, get checked out on it today. At your AMF Roadmaster Dealer's.

The Dumb Ones

WITH the siren screaming and the red warning light flashing from side to side, the car of Inspector Cliff Brink of the Arson Squad raced through the traffic. Detective Bob Corby, his driver, kept the gas pedal as near the floor board as he dared. Driving through metropolitan traffic is no cinch at ordinary speeds. But racing through it is enough to age a man before his time.

"Hurry," ordered Brink. "The call came through that it looks like a set fire. The sooner we get there, the more we'll find out."

As the car swung around a corner, they could see the glow in the sky. It was a big fire. The traffic patrolman waved them through the barricades and soon they were skidding to a stop near the massed fire fighting equipment. It was a three-story building and the factory of Watts Furriers, a wholesale house. Brink jumped from the car and ran to where the fire chief stood.

"Some blaze," said Brink. "Really think this is an arson case?"

"I'd bet my bottom dollar on it, Brink," shouted the fire chief. "That's why I put in the call for you. This fire started too fast and was going too good when we got here to be anything else. The plant had just shut down so the fire couldn't have started more than a few minutes before. Looks as if we're going to lose the entire building except for the front office section. I think we'll save that. But we can't do much investigating until we get this thing calmed down."

"I see that," commented Brink. Then, turning to his assistant, Corby, he said, "Get in touch with the owner and get him down here."

"I'm ahead of you there," grinned Corby. "I just went across the street and called. He's at home in bed. Been sick for the last three days. He told me to get in touch with his secretary and she'd give us any information we need. I have her address."

"Then get her and bring her here," ordered Brink. "I'll check here as soon as I can."

An hour later, the fire chief, the secretary Miss Anders, the inspector and the detective worked their way through the ruins. A strong smell of burning fur almost overpowered them. The chief pointed to a pile of burned rubble. It had been fur.

"Guess those won't be much good for coats now," he commented.

"Poor Mr. Watts," groaned Miss Anders. "That's sixty thousand dollars worth of mink skins. They came in this afternoon and hadn't even been unpacked. Fortunately, they're insured so Mr. Watts won't suffer a financial loss. But we need them for our fall orders and——"

"Come here, Chief," said Brink, interrupting Miss Anders. "You were right."

Kneeling before the pile of burned furs, Brink pointed to the charred wood around it. "The fire was set without a doubt," he continued. "The fact that the wood is much more charred at this point and that you can get a faint smell of benzine proves it. These furs were meant to burn."

Then turning to Corby, he added, "Take these ashes to the lab. Get a report on them and meet me at Watts' home as soon as possible. That's all for you, Miss Anders."

When Brink approached Watts' house, he found Corby waiting for him. Brink took the lab report, looked at it, and then knocked on the door. They were admitted by a small, timid looking man. The inspector introduced himself and Corby.

"I'm afraid," quavered Watts, "that this has been a terrible day. And I'm also afraid that I can't do much to help you. I've been ill here at home for the past three days. And now we've had this terrible fire. And sixty thousand dollars worth of mink furs that we needed have gone up in flames. I'll lose a lot of money."

"You're going to lose more than money, Mr. Watts," snarled Brink. "You're going to lose the right to the pursuit of freedom and happiness for some time."

"Wh-what do you mean?" stammered Watts, now looking frightened.

"You said those furs that burned were mink," explained Brink. "They weren't. They were cheap rabbit furs as I thought when I saw them. Also evidence shows that the fire was set. And I checked on your financial status and I know you're broke. It was a nice scheme if it had worked—sixty grand for a few worthless rabbit skins. But laboratory tests don't lie. So I'm taking you in."

"Don't do that. Please don't do that," cried Watts. "It was all my secretary's idea. She told me to stay home and pretend to be sick and she'd take care of the rest. We were going to split the insurance. It would put me on my feet again."

"Come on," roared Brink in disgust. "You cheap crooks always cry when you're caught. You always figure you can make suckers out of the cops. We're supposed to be dumb."

"But you guys are the dumb ones," he continued as Corby slipped the handcuffs on the wrists of Watts. "If you'd just stop to realize how full the jails are, you'd know that we're not the dumb ones. It's people like you who are—the ones who are on the inside."
